The E.L.S.C. FILES is a collaborative artists' book project by photographic artist Julie Cook with the East London Strippers Collective. It evidences the activism of a group of six women, juxtaposing the language of photographic portraiture and other ephemera with performance and set within an East London warehouse awaiting demolition. The files challenge the notion of 'progress' in many ways. The content includes not just portraiture, but evidence of activism via social media and more traditional public networks. The documentary files present this work in a series of folders that play on the theme of institutional, paper, record keeping, perhaps with sinister overtones.
